Reading Comprehension - Passage 1

Organisations often adopt digital tools expecting immediate productivity gains. Yet a tool's impact depends less on its features than on how work is organised around it. When a team digitises a confusing process without reconsidering the process itself, the confusion may simply move onto a screen. Conversely, a modest tool can be valuable if responsibilities are clear, staff are trained, and feedback is used to improve the workflow. Technology can reduce repetitive effort, but it does not automatically settle questions about priorities or accountability. A successful implementation therefore treats software as part of a wider system of people, routines, and decisions. Before asking which tool is most powerful, organisations should ask what problem they are trying to solve and how they will know whether it has been solved.

1. What is the central idea of the passage?
   A. Organisations should replace all manual work with digital tools.
   B. Digital tools improve productivity only when integrated with clear processes and goals.

   D. Staff training is unnecessary when software is powerful.
   E. Technology always creates accountability problems.

2. The statement that confusion may 'move onto a screen' means that:
   A. digital screens cause every workplace problem.
   B. software automatically makes a process simpler.
   C. digitising a poorly designed process does not fix the underlying problem.
   D. employees should avoid using screens.
   E. confusing processes cannot be improved.

Reading Comprehension - Passage 2

Public debates often reward confident statements more than careful qualifications. A speaker who says a policy will solve a problem may sound more persuasive than one who explains that the outcome depends on implementation, funding, and local conditions. However, confidence is not the same as evidence. Qualified language can reflect intellectual honesty rather than weakness, particularly when a problem has several causes. This does not mean that every claim should be treated as uncertain or that decision-makers should avoid action. It means that the strength of a conclusion should match the strength of the available evidence. Good judgement often requires both a willingness to act and a willingness to revise a decision when new information appears.

7. What is the main argument of the passage?

A. Confident speakers are always correct.
B. Decision-makers should postpone every decision.
C. The certainty of a conclusion should be proportionate to the available evidence.
D. Public debates should exclude policy discussions.
E. Qualified language is a sign of poor leadership.

8. Why can qualified language be valuable?

A. It can show intellectual honesty when a problem has several causes.
B. It guarantees that a policy will work.
C. It avoids the need for evidence.
D. It prevents all disagreement.
E. It makes decisions unnecessary.

9. Which statement is NOT supported by the passage?

A. Confidence and evidence are different things.
B. Decision-makers may need to revise decisions when new information appears.
C. Every claim should be treated as uncertain and action should always be avoided.
D. A problem may have several causes.
E. A conclusion should reflect the available evidence.

10. The phrase 'the strength of a conclusion should match the strength of the available evidence' means that:

A. strong conclusions should be made before gathering evidence.
B. the level of certainty should be justified by the quality of evidence.
C. evidence matters only in scientific research.
